Week 6 Breakdown

The Rundown Week 6

🏆 High Scorer of the Week
Ed — 125.04 points | 11-0 All-Play
Four teams posted season lows as the league had its quietest week since the 2025 regular-season finale. Ed responded with his second-best score, without Jahmyr Gibbs. Next is Dawson, who beat Ed during his 69.16-point outing last season, then scored a season-low 54.42 in their rematch. Ed's two best performances have lifted him from eighth to fourth in scoring, but gained just 6.06 points on Derrick. The leader remains 85.00 ahead.

🍀 Lucky Break
Hannah — 87.68 points | 3-8 All-Play
Hannah makes her third appearance here after winning with a score that would have lost to eight opponents. Her all-play performance suggests roughly three wins through six weeks; she has five. She ranks eighth in scoring and carries the lowest playoff odds among winning teams at 70%. This was her third week below 100 points. Next opponent Brett hasn't scored below 100 once.

🎲 Not So Lucky
Castano — 103.94 points | 7-4 All-Play
Castano lands here for the second straight week after outscoring seven teams and still falling to 0-6. Only three of the league's 12 schedules would leave him winless; Bryan's or Ed's would put him at 4-2. He now owns a better all-play record than 3-3 Bryan, the first team outside the playoff field. Same scores, very different seasons.

🪑 Bench Blunders
No Qualifiers This Week
Kyle: Two Swaps, Still Short
Bye weeks thinned the benches, leaving fewer chances to get the lineup wrong. No single swap or two-swap combination would have flipped a result. Kyle came closest: Goedert over Fannin and Shaheed over Garrett Wilson add 10.60 points, bringing him to 106.28. Even those two moves leave him 0.48 short of Derrick.

🎯 Sharp Shooter
Brett, Castano & John — 100% Lineup Accuracy Week 6
Bye weeks made some decisions easier, but all three squeezed every available point from their rosters. Only Brett came away with a win. Castano and John had no better lineup to turn to. Lewis remains the season-long accuracy leader at 93.0%, just ahead of John's 92.8%.

League Historical playoff rates after Week 6:
5-1: 100% (7/7) | 4-2: 76.9% (10/13)
3-3: 44.4% (8/18) | 2-4: 20.0% (2/10)
| 0-6: 0% (0/3)

Nationwide 2025 playoff rates according to Sleeper:

2-4: 23.5% | 0-6: 1.5%

Around the League

First Place and the Ed Effect

First place was up for grabs. Ed brought 125.04 points. John brought his lowest score of the season. John's stay at No. 1 lasted just one week, marking the fifth straight week the top spot has changed hands. Ed moves to 5-1 alongside Hannah, with a 53.20-point scoring advantage putting him back on top. His latest win also adds to a familiar league curiosity: opponents keep having unusually quiet weeks against Ed.

The Ed Effect usually earns a passing mention when another opponent falls flat. Across 20 regular-season games since the start of 2025, though, the pattern is striking. Eight opponents posted their season low against him, accounting for 40% of his schedule compared with a league-wide rate of 10%. Nobody else has caught more than three. Those lows reflect the full 2025 regular season and this year through Week 6, rather than just the games played before each meeting.

At the other extreme, Ed hasn't faced a single opponent's season high. Wayne has caught three, with opponents averaging 116.02 points against him compared with 88.97 against Ed. Over the same stretch, they've faced a 27.05-point weekly difference in what it takes to win.

Still, Ed's recent production deserves equal billing. His 129.84 average over the last two weeks leads the league, lifting him from eighth to fourth in total points. He's gone 21-1 in all-play during that run, bringing his season mark to 41-25, tied for third. The underlying numbers are beginning to support his place in the standings.

Now comes Dawson, whose recovery from 0-4 to 2-4 has been backed by the league's third-highest scoring average over the last two weeks: 126.15. Only Ed and Derrick have scored more during that stretch. Dawson's last meeting with Ed produced his lowest score of 2025, just 54.42 points. His team is finally clicking after an 0-4 start. Keeping it that way against Ed would give this comeback a little more credibility.

Week 7: What's at Stake

Ed (5-1) vs. Dawson (2-4):
Testing the Turnaround
Dawson has followed four losses with two wins, averaging 126.15 during the recovery. Now he faces Ed, the league's hottest scorer over that stretch. A third win would give Dawson's comeback more credibility. Ed can reach 6-1 and become this season's first consecutive-week No. 1, provided Hannah doesn't erase his 53.20-point advantage.

Hannah (5-1) vs. Brett (3-3):
The Record Meets the Numbers
Hannah has won four straight, but her 96.24-point average over the last five weeks trails every other winning team by at least 14 points per game. Brett ranks second in scoring and all-play despite sitting at .500. He can finally claim a winning record; Hannah can extend her career-best start to 6-1 while continuing to defy the numbers.

Bryan (3-3) vs. Wayne (2-4):
Different Reasons for Needing One
Bryan's 49.02-point week dropped him to last in scoring, making wins more important as his tiebreaker position weakens. Wayne has faced the second-most points behind Brett, with opponents averaging 114.67. His schedule deserves some blame, but his own 80.12 average over the last two weeks hasn't helped. Both need a rebound.

Josh (4-2) vs. Kyle (2-4):
Momentum in Opposite Directions
Josh has won four of five since losing his debut. Kyle has lost four straight since opening 2-0. Josh can reach 5-2 and stay in the bye conversation. Kyle needs to interrupt the slide, and beating a team ranked third in scoring would offer reassurance that his promising start wasn't the season's high point.

Derrick (4-2) vs. Lewis (2-4):
No Room for a Quiet Week
Derrick leads the league in scoring but remains one win behind Ed and Hannah. His points advantage puts him in position to capitalize if either slips. Lewis has lost two straight, but an upset would send him into the second half at 3-4. For Derrick, it's an opportunity to press the leaders; for Lewis, a chance to interrupt their separation from the pack.

John (4-2) vs. Castano (0-6):
Nobody Wants to Be the First
Castano outscored John by 22.54 last week, a reminder that their records don't settle this matchup. Another performance like that could finally end his winless start. John needs a response after falling from first to fifth. A win keeps him near the leaders; a loss gives Castano his breakthrough at John's expense.

Reading the Race

SECOND-BEST. SIXTH PLACE.

Brett is second in scoring, second in all-play, and barely inside the playoff field. His odds rose 10 points to 64%, the week's biggest gain. His record is finally catching up.

FIVE WINS. EIGHTH-BEST NUMBERS.

Hannah shares the best record but ranks eighth in scoring and all-play. The cushion counts. Whether her production can protect it is the question.

DAWSON IS BACK IN THE PICTURE

One win moved Dawson from 11th to eighth. Two straight have lifted his playoff odds from 12% to 20%. His 33-33 all-play record suggests the comeback has something behind it.

TIED IN WINS. MILES APART IN POINTS.

Bryan and Brett are both 3-3, separated by 174.20 points. Bryan is one place outside the field, but the tiebreaker is no shortcut. He needs wins to do the climbing.

BETTER SCORES. SAME ZERO.

Castano's last two performances have been his best. He still sits 0-6 with playoff odds below 1%. The production has improved before the results have.

FIVE CAN PULL AWAY. ELEVEN CAN STAY CLOSE.

Every team with a winning record faces an opponent at .500 or below. If all six better-record teams win, the top six would reach halfway with 31 combined wins, the most in the archive. Reverse those results, and that total drops to 26, tying the lowest (2022). Eleven teams would sit between 3-4 and 5-2, with five just one win below the playoff cutoff. Week 7 could separate the field or leave nearly everyone within reach.

WEEK 6 STORYLINES

2026 WEEK 6

FIRST PLACE REMAINS UNSETTLED

Ed reclaimed first place in Week 6, becoming the first manager to lead twice this season. Nobody has held the spot in consecutive weeks. Hannah remains tied at 5-1, trailing by 53.20 points. Losses by both could allow Derrick, Josh and John to join them at 5-2, leaving as many as five teams tied for the lead at halfway.

THE CHAMPION NEEDS A RESPONSE

Wayne's opponents have averaged 116.02 points since the start of 2025, the highest among returning managers. Ed's have averaged 88.97. Wayne has also faced three opponent season highs to Ed's zero, putting him on the other side of the Ed Effect. But the defending champion's recent struggles extend beyond scheduling: he has lost three straight while averaging 80.12 over his last two games.

FIVE TEAMS, SIX SPOTS

All 15 teams that reached halfway with at least five wins in the archive made the playoffs: 11 at 5-2, three at 6-1 and one at 7-0. Ed and Hannah have already secured that threshold; Derrick, Josh and John can join them this week. If all three win, a playoff field containing more than one team outside that group would require the historical streak to end.

DERRICK'S HISTORICAL PACE SLIPS

After setting the archive's five-week scoring record, Derrick posted his season low in Week 6. His 764.60 now ranks third through six weeks, behind John's 790.90 and Kevin's 784.60 from 2021. He remains 61.64 ahead of Brett in this year's scoring race, but reclaiming the historical lead will require a stronger second half.

BRYAN BREAKS THROUGH THE FLOOR

Bryan's 49.02 makes him the first manager to finish below 50 in a regular-season game, excluding ineligible lineups. It breaks Castano's 52.38 mark from 2024 and gives Bryan his second weekly scoring low this season. He remains 3-3, but ranks last in points and all-play. The record keeps him in the race; the scoring leaves little room to rely on a tiebreaker.

A RECORD LEAD, BUT NO FINISHED RACE

Derrick's 61.64-point advantage over Brett is the largest Week 6 scoring lead in the archive, more than three times the historical average. But only two of five leaders at this stage finished as scoring champion. In 2024, John climbed from seventh, erased a 122.52-point deficit to Ed and won the scoring title. Derrick has built an unusually large cushion. The archive has seen a larger comeback.
