Week 7 Breakdown

The Rundown Week 7

🏆 High Scorer of the Week
Josh — 138.78 points | 11-0 All-Play

Four teams posted season lows as the league had its quietest week since the 2025 regular-season finale. Ed responded with his second-best score, without Jahmyr Gibbs. Next is Dawson, who beat Ed during his 69.16-point outing last season, then scored a season-low 54.42 in their rematch. Ed's two best performances have lifted him from eighth to fourth in scoring, but gained just 6.06 points on Derrick. The leader remains 85.00 ahead.

🍀 Lucky Break
Hannah — 87.62 points | 3-8 All-Play

In her third straight appearance as the week's luckiest team, and fourth in five weeks, Hannah won below 88 points for the second consecutive week. Her three wins below 96 match the rest of the league combined. After last week's Ed Effect feature, there's another name to consider: Hannah now faces the league's lowest opponent average, 86.45, and has matched Ed with two opponent season lows. Brett supplied the latest as she reached 6-1.

🎲 Not So Lucky
Lewis — 111.20 points | 6-5 All-Play

Lewis posted his second-best score of the season and still took his third straight loss. His 111.20 would have beaten six teams, but Derrick finished 11.74 ahead. It's the eighth time this season a team has scored at least 110 and lost. Lewis falls to 2-5, with little relief next: Josh arrives off the week's highest score.

🪑 Bench Blunders
Brett: A Costly Zero

Tre Tucker's 19.30 points stayed on Brett's bench while Christian Kirk scored zero. That single swap would have lifted Brett to 88.26, enough to beat Hannah by just 0.64. Instead, Brett fell to 3-4 while Hannah collected her sixth win. His first sub-100 score of the season still could have been enough with the right receiver in the lineup.

🎯 Sharp Shooter
Josh — 100% Lineup Accuracy

Josh paired the highest score with a perfect lineup, leaving no better combination on his bench. With Lamar Jackson unavailable and Terry McLaurin on bye, his starters still delivered 138.78. He's also closing on the season accuracy lead: Lewis remains first at 93.7%, with Josh just behind at 93.3%.

League Historical playoff rates after Week 7:
6-1: 100% (3/3) | 5-2: 100% (11/11)
3-4: 30.8% (4/13) | 2-5: 16.7% (2/12)
0-7: 0% (0/1)

Nationwide 2025 playoff rates according to Sleeper:
6-1: 92.0% | 5-2: 75.6%
3-4: 22.5% | 2-5: 6.4% | 0-7: 0.1%

Around the League

Five Have Separated

There are seven games left, but the standings already have a clear dividing line. Ed and Hannah are 6-1. Derrick, Josh and John are 5-2. Nobody else has a winning record.

All five won in Week 7, making this the first season in the 2021–2026 archive with five teams at five or more wins by halfway. Never before has sixth place trailed fifth by two games at this point.

An average of three teams reached halfway with at least five wins over the previous five seasons. Every one of those 15 teams made the playoffs. Maintaining that streak this year would leave one spot for the other seven managers.

Brett currently holds it at 3-4, despite scoring a season-low 68.96 against Hannah. Wayne joined him with a win over Bryan, who also sits 3-4 but trails Brett by 147.70 points. Dawson, Kyle and Lewis remain one game back at 2-5. The leading group has separated, but sixth place is still within reach of nearly everyone.

Week 8 should tell us more about the order at both ends of that gap. Hannah (6-1) faces John (5-2), and Ed (6-1) meets Derrick (5-2). Wins for John and Derrick would bring all four to 6-2. Josh (5-2) could join them by beating Lewis (2-5), creating a five-way tie for first.

Points would sort out that crowd, and Josh just improved his position. His league-leading 138.78 moved him into second in scoring, 57.66 behind Derrick. Ed is third, only 7.28 ahead of John. Derrick's production gives him the advantage in a tie; he still needs the results to create one.

Brett (3-4) can protect sixth by beating Bryan (3-4), provided Wayne doesn't erase his 49.66-point scoring advantage. Wayne (3-4) faces Kyle (2-5) with a chance to reach .500 and take Brett's place if he slips. Bryan can also reach 4-4, though his scoring deficit makes winning especially important. Dawson (2-5) meets Castano (0-7) after his two-game recovery ended against Ed.

The schedule offered the leaders a chance to pull away last week, and all five took it. This week, four of them have to play each other. For the teams chasing sixth, that makes winning their own matchup a little more valuable.

Week 8: What's at Stake

Hannah (6-1) vs. John (5-2)
A Different Kind of Test

John has scored at least 113 points in four of his last five games. Hannah hasn't reached that mark since Week 1, but enters with a one-win lead. A victory keeps her in position for a first-round bye. A loss puts John ahead on the points tiebreaker and could send Hannah from second to as low as fifth overall.

Ed (6-1) vs. Derrick (5-2)

Ed has averaged 126.65 over the last three weeks, narrowly ahead of Derrick's 125.52. Now he faces the league's scoring leader, whose 61-16 all-play record is the archive's best through halfway. Derrick can draw level at 6-2 and move ahead of Ed on points. Ed can put two wins between them with six games remaining.

Wayne (3-4) vs. Kyle (2-5)
One Streak Ended. One Keeps Growing.

Wayne stopped a three-game skid last week; Kyle's dropped five straight after a 2-0 start. Both have faced difficult schedules, but Kyle has also scored below 100 in three straight games. Wayne can return to .500 and challenge for sixth. Kyle needs the win to stop the skid and stay in position for a second half playoff push

Josh (5-2) vs. Lewis (2-5)
The Rookie Can Gain Ground

Four of the other leading teams play each other, giving Josh an opening to improve his position in the bye race. He and Derrick are the only managers to score at least 100 every week. Lewis just produced his second-best score and still lost. An upset keeps him within striking distance and ends the 3 game losing streak

Bryan (3-4) vs. Brett (3-4)
Same Record, Less Room for Bryan

Bryan has the league's fewest points but shares Brett's 3-4 record. That makes this opportunity especially valuable: Brett's 147.70-point advantage offers protection in a crowded tiebreaker, while Bryan needs to separate himself with wins. The winner reaches .500 and stays in the race for sixth. The loser falls a game behind, with Brett better equipped to recover through a tie.

Castano (0-7) vs. Dawson (2-5)
A Shared Start, Different Stakes

Both opened 0-4, but only Dawson has found a way back into the race. Castano's consecutive 100-point losses suggested progress before last week's season low. His own playoff hopes are fading, but sending Dawson to 2-6 would offer some consolation. Dawson needs the win to stay keep his recovery alive.

Mid Season Standings

69.82 POINTS IN ONE WEEK

Josh's gain on Brett in Week 7, jumping him from third to second in scoring. Brett fell from second to fifth.

ONE RECORD, THREE OUTLOOKS

Brett, Wayne and Bryan are all 3-4. Their playoff odds: 44%, 40%, 19%..

34-43

Wayne (3-4) and Kyle (2-5) have identical all-play records. Their playoff odds are 33 percentage points apart. They meet this week.

SIXTH ON PERFORMANCE. NINTH IN PRACTICE.

Dawson (2-5) holds the final top-six spot in both points and all-play, but sits three places lower in the standings.

57.66 TO CATCH DERRICK

Josh is the closest challenger in the points race. Only 7.28 points separate Ed and John for third.

89% TO 44%

The playoff-odds drop from Hannah (6-1) to Brett (3-4), the fifth- and sixth-highest chances in the league. Five teams look comfortable. Nobody else is above a coin flip.

WEEK 7 STORYLINES

2026 WEEK 7

FIRST PLACE GETS A DIRECT CHALLENGE

Ed and Hannah are 6-1, but both face a 5-2 contender this week. Derrick can pull level with Ed and pass him on points; John can do the same to Hannah. The two leaders have built a cushion over the playoff bubble. Their grip on the first-round byes is considerably less secure.

THE ROOKIE IS SETTING HIS OWN STANDARD

Josh has won five of six, climbed to second in scoring and joined Derrick as the only teams to reach 100 points every week. His 138.78 against Kyle was his best yet. With the four other leading contenders facing one another, a win over Lewis would guarantee Josh gains ground on two of them.

BRETT'S CUSHION TAKES A HIT

Brett's first sub-100 score cost him a win and three places in the scoring race. Now he faces Bryan with both at 3-4. His 147.70-point advantage gives him substantial tiebreaker protection, but a loss would put Bryan ahead without needing the tiebreaker at all.

KYLE'S START HAS COME UNDONE

A 2-0 start has become five straight losses, with Kyle averaging just 86.49 over the last three weeks. Wayne offers a chance to stop the slide and pull level at 3-5. A sixth consecutive loss would instead leave Kyle two wins behind another contender for the final playoff spot.

DAWSON CAN'T AFFORD TO BE THE FIRST

Dawson turned 0-4 into a recovery bid, and he's escaped his current 2-5 record before, reaching the 2021 playoffs. Beating winless Castano would move him to 3-5, a mark from which three of 12 historical teams qualified. Lose, and his comeback enters uncharted territory: no team has reached the playoffs from 2-6 in seven attempts.

FOUR SEATS COULD CHANGE HANDS

Only Ed and Derrick appear in both last year's playoff field and this year's projected six. Josh, John, Hannah and Brett would replace Wayne, Bryan, Kyle and Castano, turning over two-thirds of the bracket. The defending champion remains the closest threat to that reshuffle: Wayne's 40% playoff chance sits just behind Brett's 44%.
